and more recently that there has been a widespread demand for extensive exploitation of covert measures. The _______ and other efforts of this kind have further stimulated interest and attracted attention. The announcement in late August of the establishment of the National Psychological Strategy Board drew press comment in the United States and abroad all out of proportion to the significance of this development. Certain of our advisors, including General Magruder, have been of the opinion for some time that it would do no harm and probably much good if the public and the Congress could be made aware of the fact that a serious and responsible effort is being made in the field.

3. The problem is, therefore, to decide what our position should be, and if this question should be resolved favorably to giving out some form of assurance, what the means and extent of the giving should be. It is my own view that it should be possible to find a formula which would sufficiently satisfy public and Congressional inquiries without at the same time giving any information to the Russians which they do not already have or assume. I do not think that the CIA should be identified as the operative Agency, and my thought as to the manner in which this could be handled would be to tie the release up with an announcement of some new development in the general propaganda and psychological warfare field. The difficulty here is to find the proper event or development to which the release could be related. This might take the form of an announcement made in connection with the appointment of the overall coordinator for the national psychological warfare effort (this is the matter which is still unresolved as between the Departments of State and Defense and the JCS, and which I discussed in this connection with Mr. Dulles in the conversation mentioned above).

your advice and guidance on this matter will be most appreciated.
will be expecting some word from us in the not too distant future.

5. Irrespective of what the determination should be as regards the giving out of some kind of information (reassurance) to the public or the press, there remains the necessity for arriving at some procedure and formula for dealing with serious members of the Congress who consider that they have a legitimate interest in knowing something about what is going on. Congressional inquiries continue to reach us in many ways, usually via representatives of the Departments of State and Defense who are exposed to Congressional appropriations and foreign relations committees. For example, about two weeks ago, was jumped on the same day by members of the House and Senate subcommittees
